BURY ME THERE.

BY G. L. Man is a vision that fades away. Earth is a measureless Golgotha;

Countless and crowded the graves that be, 'Neath the green grass turf and the solemn sea." The grave is a lonely and darksome thing, And sad are the thoughts its pictures bring;

The thought how pensive, how drear and dread, Of a brother or sister or parent dead. Then bury me not in a foreign land, Where hearts are cold to the stranger's hand ; Away from the clime where my kindred are,

Oh, bury me not! Oh! no, not there. And bury me not in these Island bowers, Where summer laughs with her fadeless flo Where Zephyrs move with the sweetest air, Oh, bury me not ! good friends, not there.

Oh bury me not in the mountain glen, Away from the friendly voices of men Neither beneath the green-wood tree,

Nor within the slope of the deep green hill, By the roaring flood or the gurgling rill; Nor beneath the waves of the sounding sea! Oh, never an ocean grave for me!

But give me a place in the church-yard nigh, Shadeless, but green, 'neath the broad blue sky ; By the graves where my sister and brothers are, Oh, bury me there ! good friends, yes, there.
